Jack was born in Belfast, into a home full of books.

There were books in the study, books in the drawing room, books in the bedrooms, and even books in the bathroom!

Jack spent many rainy days reading, and soon he started writing his own stories too. He wrote stories set in magical lands filled with talking animals.

Jack's name wasn't actually Jack. It was Clive Staples. But he didn't like that name and insisted that everyone call him Jack, after his favourite dog.

Today, many of us know him as C.S. Lewis.
